SOLIDARITY

WITH PUBLIC SERVICE WORKERS!

The Industrial Workers of the World extended its solidarity with all public service workers taking part in what was one of the country's largest strike action on Wednesday 14th October.

Unions directly involved have been holding separate talks with mediators up until recently and more are planned in the coming days. Representatives have accused the Government of stalling on 'credible offers on pay'.

A spokesperson for the IWW Ireland Branch said: "As a union we extend our solidarity with all workers taking part in industrial action. We also have to acknowledge that this is an important time for the labour movement, as well as for public sector workers taking part in strike action. It is through times such as these that many workers come to understand both the importance of belonging to a union and the strength they have collectively as workers.

"The organising and the discussions that workers are having at this time within the workplace and around our demands that we collectively set out. These are important conversations that many workplaces are participating in.

"For ourselves, these are important lessons for workers who are actively taking part in the class struggle as strike action continues, and for those workplace struggles that have yet to come. In the months ahead, many workers, some who are not even in a union, will gain strength from the actions of our public sector workers."

As further strike action is now being put forward, workers are once again preparing themselves for the picket lines. In doing so, the IWW extends its solidarity and support to all those workers across the country and to their respective unions.

IWW STAND WITH JOURNALIST:

STOP THE INTIMIDATION!

The Industrial Workers of the World in Derry extends its solidarity with a local journalist following targeted threats and intimidation.

A spokesperson for the IWW Derry Branch said: The IWW would like to extend our support and solidarity with a local journalist who faced targeted abuse and threats whilst covering a street protest outside of the Waterside Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) station.

We condemn the actions of those behind the threatening behaviour towards a local journalist whilst covering a community interest story.

The photographer, a local member of the National Union of Journalists (NUJ), was singled out and threatened by several members of protest, who advised them to not to document the protest action 'if they wanted to get out of the area safe and sound'.

The IWW condemns all acts of threats and intimidation towards any journalist going about the course of their day-to-day work.

Sadly, over the last decade or more, we have increasingly witnessed a deliberate escalation of attacks and intimidation on journalists, at both national and international levels.

We would like to extend our solidarity with the journalist directly involved and to all NUJ members at this time.

Journalists face all sorts of deplorable behaviour on a daily basis, from physical threats to actual assaults, and even loss of life. Any attack on journalists is an attack on all of us as workers.

It is totally unacceptable and requires a wider response from the labour movement.
